Mrs. Carman's Fate In Hands Of Jury

After Listening to the Summing Up of the Defense and Prosecution and the Charge of Justice Kelby the Jury Retires to Begin Deliberations.

MINEOLA, N. Y., Oct. 25.—At midnight the Carman jury was still out. It had been deliberating two hours and fifteen minutes.

MINEOLA, N. Y., Oct. 24.—The Jury in the case of Mrs. Florence Conklin Carman, after listening all the afternoon and evening to the summing up of the defense and the prosecution and the charge of Justice Charles H. Kelby, retired at 9.45 o'clock to-night to begin its deliberations.

The defense of the woman charged with the murder of Mrs. Louise Bailey rested its case early in the morning session and several witnesses in rebuttal were called.

Then for more than three hours and a half John J. Graham, Mrs. Carman's chief counsel, dissected the State's case. He severely criticized the district attorney's methods, particularly referring to the manner in which the prosecutor had guarded the witness, Celia Coleman. He asserted the slayer of Mrs. Bailey undoubtedly was a man. He scouted the testimony of Celia Coleman and Frank Farrell.

In summing up, District Attorney Smith painted Mrs. Carman as a calculating, scheming woman, who deliberately murdered under the spur of jealousy. He laid emphasis on the testimony of the negress, Celia Coleman, and Farrell. He said he knew the murder was "an inside job," and that the servant, if anyone, would be the person to tell about it.

Had he allowed the girl to stay in the house, he said, she would have remained under the influence of the Carman family. He excused her alleged falsehoods at the start by her own words—that she was "sorry for Mrs. Carman."

The family of the murdered woman were in court all day. Before the justice began his charge Graham took exception to several of the district attorney's statements, claiming the prosecutor had not stuck to the facts.

Justice Kelby began to deliver his charge shortly after 9 o'clock. He did not discuss the evidence, but explained different degrees of homicide, discussed at some length the credibility of witnesses and said that a mass of the evidence in this case was admitted for the purpose of impeaching other witnesses.

When a ten minutes recess was taken today the jury was told to decide whether it would go to dinner before the summing up of the State's case by District Attorney Smith. The jury decided to do without dinner and District Attorney Smith began:

"I tell you, gentlemen, I knew this was an inside job. I determined to get the truth and went after the person who knew about every person in the house. And I tell you the negro girl has been an unwilling witness."

The district attorney vigorously defended the girl, then started to analyze the case of the defense:

"You can't expect any enlightenment," he said, "from Mrs. Carman. She has a vital interest in the outcome."

"Don't you think it would be human for a woman to come downstairs after hearing a noise, finding out that a woman had been shot and not have to curiosity to go into the doctor's office and see who it was?"

The district attorney then took up the testimony of other members of the Carman family and said it was untrue, as the witnesses had motives to testify falsely.

"Now," he went on, "I'll tell you why Mrs. Carman said 'I shot him.' He dropped on the floor behind the operating chair. So she thought the bullet had hit him."

"I don't know whether or not it was a case of mistaken identity regarding Mrs. Bailey. Nobody will ever know unless Mrs. Carman tells."

DIFFERENT METHODS FOR FANCY RIDING

ROUGH RIDERS OF ALL NATIONS ARE COMING HERE

World's Best Horsemen Will Be Seen in Anderson With Show Tuesday.

The different methods of riding of the different nationalities of the world are illustrated by the congress of rough riders with the 101 Ranch Real Wild West, which comes to Anderson on Tuesday, October 27, at the old show grounds.

Every style of equitation is depicted from the great menages of Europe to the latest and most modern style prevailing among the smart set of this country.

The widely different mounts could not be more fully demonstrated than the almost extreme seats of the cowboy and the fox hunter, shown in the season's program. The cowboy is astride his pony from a dozen hours upwards every day, cutting out steers and dragging out wired cows. He is compelled to stick to his saddle under the most abnormal conditions, and it need be he must have both hands at liberty. The fox hunter has nothing to do but "sit tight," and has no occupation for his hands, except, by the play of the bit, to get the very best performance out of his horse—a delicate enough operation and not to be quickly acquired. He uses a saddle in which he can sit safely over different obstacles, but which is convenient to fall out of should the horse come down. A huntsman rides the flattest thing known except a pad.

The home of the short seat and long stirrup is the Occident; that of the long seat and short stirrup the Orient. These are varied in every locality to suit its own peculiarities, inherited or acquired. The astern rider clings to his extremely short leather in order to place him higher than others above his horse in the charge and therefore make him the more imposing when he stands up in his stirrups to brandish scimitar or matchlock.

In some parts of this country where riders are pre-eminent, they learn early to throw their horses and use the mfor ramparts from behind which they can fire. They also are adept at remounting rapidly, throw their horses at a gallop, pick up wounded men and leap from horse to horse while going at full speed.

In matters equine it is conceded that America stands foremost. We are a many sided people and our equestrianism partakes of our many-sidedness. The greatest variety of riders which any one people has produced has thrived in the continent of North America. We can count within the boundaries of the Union almost every type of rider from those who subdue the steed in the era of the "Mex of the Parthenon to the faithful family "Dobbin" of today.

Both the Miller Brothers and Edward Arlington have prepared several numbers this year to display the ornamental movements of horsemanship contrasting them vividly to the rougher and uncontrolled methods of the horse in motion. Together the numbers from the most satisfying and exhilarating exposition of riding on a scale so large and varied that it stands unmatched in the history of equestrian entertainment both in America and Europe, and at no time is there a single trace or semblance of the circus or its horsemanship.

It is distinctly a class of its own and shows equally in the man conditions of the globe are shown rather than the acquired tactics of the finished rider who works incessantly against foreign tricksters.

There will be a parade at 10:30 o'clock. In a certain town a Mr. Cobb married a Miss Webb, and it was said he fell in love with her as soon as he spied her.

MURDERED MAN WAS BURIED IN ANDERSON

MAN WAS KILLED WHILE WITH TENT SHOW

SEVERAL ARRESTS

Greenville Parties Are Placed in Jail, Charged With Murder of Man Well Known Here.

Anderson people have been greatly interested in Greenville's latest murder mystery because of the fact that the dead man was a native of this county and was well known in and around Anderson. B. S. McTindall, who was killed while traveling with the Keystone Wagon shows, and his body thrown into a river, had several relatives in Anderson and many friends.

The Greenville News of Saturday says: "The officers at Brevard have worked fast on the McTindall murder case and have already rounded up three suspects. McTindall was buried yesterday in Anderson county and the three men were arrested on Thursday. The Asheville citizen of yesterday morning contains the following account of the arrests:

"Following field investigations by the sheriff's officers of Transylvania county and the police department of Brevard, H. Hedricks, D. E. Whitt and H. Harper, were arrested near Pisgah Forest station yesterday morning and lodged in the jail of Brevard on warrants charging them with the murder of B. S. McTindall. The prisoners are being held without bail in the Brevard jail until they can be given a preliminary hearing before Recorder J. A. Forsythe. This hearing probably will be conducted this morning in case all of the witnesses in the trial can be secured. "The dead body of McTindall was found floating in the Davidson river

Tuesday morning and a short time afterward the members of the company connected with the Keystone Wagon shows, with which the deceased had been working until the day before his body was found, were arrested on warrants charging murder. At a hearing conducted before Recorder Forsythe the next day the defendants were found not guilty. It is stated, however, that in the progress of the trial and in questioning several of the members of the troupe privately, information was secured that led to the arrest of the prisoners who now occupy cells in the jail.

"The arrest of the three men came as a surprise to the entire community, especially as Whitt is the man who first reported the fact that the body was in the river. He stated that he discovered it lying in the water under a foot log as he was crossing the river from Hedricks' store to the mill of the Carr Lumber company. Whitt was used as a witness in the hearing given the members of the show troupe.

"The arrest of the three men was made by Deputy Sheriff W. H. Harris and Chief W. W. Singleton, of the Brevard police, both of whom have been working on the case constantly since the body was reported to be in the river. In speaking of the arrest Deputy Sheriff Harris stated last night that many new phases of the situation will be brought out at the hearing and that a considerable amount of new evidence has been secured.

"The three prisoners live together over Hedrick's store, Harper operating a restaurant in connection with the establishment."
